THE CANAAN CHILD-MURDER-MRS. BROWN'S CON FLICTING CONFESSIONS.

Mrs. Josephine Brown, now in jail at Hartford, Conn., has made three confessions, the first two of which conflict with one whose substance has been published, in the first, she told Lieut. Parker that she supposed the child Angeline to have been Brown's daughter; that she first saw her in the depot at Xenia or Dayton; that it was in New-York he first told her of the child; and that, or the night of the fire, when she went up to the hotel. Brown and Angeline were eating supper together. In the second, she said that Angeline was her washerwoman's daughter; that Brown had first told her about the child in Hartford; that when she left the house on the night of the first Angeline was committing to memory a chapter in the Bible; and that, after the child had been burned, Brown begged her not to confess that the child was not his, or he should be hanged for murder. In her third confession, she said that Brown gave a Mr. Beales thoo, and that, at the time of the Coroner's inquest at Canaan, Benles brought to Brown the papers giving the jury's verdict of "not guntry" and told him those papers would protect him, if he did not foolishly confess, and let something out. Mr. Brown himself remains profoundly reticent, but the Canaan officers are said to possess sufficient evidence for his conviction. It is believed that the child, whose life had been insured for $5,000, was first murdered, and that, failing to burn her corose, her murderer attempted to hide his crime by burning the house. The Hartford insurance companies are still probing for evidence. The Hartford Times has a report of a conversation with Brown in Jail, wherein the prisoner said that he had offered to surrender the policy of insurance upon the girl's life if the Company would release him from restraint. Brown and Angeline were eating supper together. In
